Ralph cannot masquerade as trustee without 1) proving it and 2) providing documents to indicate his powers

RE steal or destroy: trying to hide assets. IRA example. No will everything goes into the trust.

Ralph said it would take 'a couple' or 'a few' months to bury my parents' ashes. I asked "why so long" and he said he was too busy. I said "I can make time" and he said I'm not allowed to.

I fear he will destroy or steal family belongings or matters.

I want to be trustee immediately. I suggest he resign.

At one point he called himself executor. Then he says no need to share documents as it is a revocable trust. Then he said he is trustee.

Other reasons for me:

skill experience education

time/availability

clean record

websites, electronics skill

as this is now appropriate, both parents deceased, original parents' wishes (the history indicates after my father's involuntary, undisclosed confinement, my mother sought to exclude me and my brother moved in for the scam.

Further on, I said, "The last I read Mother was doing (Forget Word) well."

Reply: 'She was, pause, up until about a year ago.'

Ralph was shaken. Or tired. Several times he perked up and played the bully.

MOTHER HAS BEEN INCAPACITATED FOR A YEAR. Only logical. I assumed that. I gave her a chance to explain and she didn't. Then I sent many cards etc. Were they intercepted.

When did Ralph become a) involved b) active trustee and c) only trustee upon Mother's death

- he said 'we won't talk about the past.' He was trying to make everything start now
- I told him "I don't trust you" and he became angry, loud, and defensive.
- Mother probably changed the trust when Dad died. OMG the Dad died email. Has Ralph been (active) trustee since October 30, 2014.
- Ralph probably plotting, thinking he is in charge, since 2011 to 2014.

And more to come.

I brought up IRA, RMD in particular. Yes, Mother was doing it. Conventional and I believe Roth.

Told "none of your business."

Yes, a trustee can probably pay legal fees, including a personal defense, from the trust.

Peter, you are right smack dab in the middle of a con.

Ralph is a grifter. He/they have been waiting for this. Thank God I am not motivated by money.

Right smack in the middle of a con.

Probably the most audacious gaslighting I have ever heard.

Did Rick actually say there are no family assets, only Mother's assets?

Yes he did.

Still no name of the family attorney.

"She's going to send you a letter at my request."

There is nothing stopping her from sending me an email saying 'how can I help you' or at a minimum 'these are your rights.'

A trust can be contested for many of the same reasons as a will, including lack of testamentary capacity, undue influence, or lack of requisite formalities.

Hipaa does not prevent Rick from sharing.

Hipaa does not prevent the home from informing me my Mother is ill or dying.

Yes, I sent printouts of parental narcissism etc. The proper response would have been to thank me and try to help the next generation. The proper response would have been to deal with it, to resolve it or at least try.

Of course my parents IRA is as much my business as Rick's.

I asked a simple question. Is there a trust? There is nothing about a living trust that prevents sharing it with all family members. There is no reason not to notify a beneficiary of a revocable trust. Doing so is a common and standard courtesy. Hiding it is suspicious.

Maybe you should try calling or visiting.

"Get with the program" is a lie and coverup. A lot of other lies and coverups too.

I stopped short when I said there is no reason I should trust Rick. Elderly abuse and estate fraud.

I have no evidence Rick's or Sue's actions have or had my parents' best interests as a priority. The extraordinary secrecy is evidence.

Rick - nothing or no one was stopping you from doing the right thing.
